Description:

An estate planning lawyer will prevent your money, capital, and business interests from going to probate court when you are gone. They will also draw up a will, trusts, and powers of attorney. Issues involving a second marriage, multiple businesses, multi-state and multi-nation real estate holdings, step children, problem children, charity bequests, IRAs and 401(k)s, and estate taxes can all be sorted through with the help of a qualified estate planning attorney.

The rather delicate subject of incapacitation and end of life services can also be included in the estate plan. If you are stricken by an illness that prevents you from exercising executive functions, you can decide now who gets to make decisions concerning your health care, and who will make decisions concerning your businesses and assets.

You have worked hard to establish solid companies and a stable family. You do not want it torn apart because of mistakes and neglect. Developing an estate plan is not something you can do on your own. Only a professional with deep insight into the law can help you draw up a plan that will actually withstand legal scrutiny. Working with an estate planning lawyer will allow you to leave the people who have come to depend on you with a clear and unambiguous document on which to build their own futures.
